This glossary contains all the words from AN INTRODUCTION TO THE FOOCHOW DIALECT as well as all those words in Maclay's DICTIONARY OF THE FOOCHOW DIALECT which are actually used in speech. In addition, a number of words found in neither of these sources is included. The only uncommon abbreviation used is M, which shows that the entry in question belongs to the class of measures. The word class of other entries we have tried to make clear from the translation.

Entries are given in the form in which they are most commonly heard in speech. Numbers in parentheses at the end of entries refer to the lessons in AN INTRODUCTION TO THE FOOCHOW DIALECT, in which they appear.

This glossary has a total of 577 pages containing 12,006 entries.

We are grateful for the assistance of Mr. Hsun Yeh, who wrote the Chinese characters; Mrs. Ann Neese, who typed the glossary; Miss Martha Chu, who helped with the collation and binding; and especially Miss Stella Huang, who wrote and indexed the original entries.
